The Media for Democracy Monitor is a transnational project aimed at gathering and comparing empirical evidence on the extent to which leading news media in contemporary democracies contribute to the core values of freedom, equality and control.

The third edition of the MDM has been carried out between 2019 and 2021, and produced new knowledge and understanding of media democratic performance facing challenges of economic and digital transformation, as well as the covid19 pandemic crisis.

The final country Reports are now available (on the project website and published by Nordicom open access) and allows comparatively analyzing and assessing strengths and weaknesses of media landscapes in eighteen consolidated democracies, with regard to a set of thirty indicators. Also, a collective volume is being published where a number of critical issues and trends are discussed by comparing the data and narratives from the participating countries.

Italy participated in the MDM 2020 thanks to the contribution of fourteen Italian researchers, from different universities, who initially met at the SISP 2019 Congress in Lecce to learn about the project, its methodology and expected outcomes; and then worked with enthusiasm on the project, the Report and in disseminating its results.

This event is an opportunity to gather at the SISP Congress, two years after, to discuss the main findings of the MDM 2020 with the project coordinator, authors of the Italian Report, guest speakers from different MDM countries, and expert discussants.
